If I had a helpful wish, I would build a school for aboriginals in Taiwan. I have been to the Rona tribe twice as a volunteer during my summer vacations. Not only did I see a great deal of breathtaking scenery and cute children but I also found a lot of people in need. Most of kids didn't attend schools. They learned songs and played games in their church. They didn't have a school bus. They might go to church from a long distance on foot. By the contrast, students in cities had colorful stationery and textbooks full of pictures. I thought everyone in Taiwan should share resources and no one could be deprived of their rights of education. If I could construct a school for aboriginal children, they could obtain a variety of knowledge and even speak up for their rights. By doing so, Taiwan could make a beautiful island of colorful culture in the future.
