Last Saturday, Sally had a picnic with two of her best friends in a wonderful afternoon. With a fabulous weather and cool breeze, Sally and her friends savored scrumptious food they brought from home, having a relaxing time chatting and playing. After such a beautiful afternoon, Sally came back home without perceiving anything wrong. Soon after, Sally felt a sense of pain in her stomach. What's worse, she could not help but throw up in the bathroom. When Sally's father came home, he assumed that Sally would welcome him with a cheerful face like before, only to find her fainting and lying in the bathroom!

Anxious and worried, Sally's father sent her to the nearest hospital. As soon as they got there, the doctor woke Sally up, finding out the cause of her pain. The doctor said she might eat something spoiled, which resulted in her stomachache. Upon hearing that, Sally considered it the food she had eaten in the afternoon, so she checked out the cracks and all the other pastries she ate. However, she did not find anything rotten until a bottle of milk came into her sight. Opening the bottle and having a whiff of it, Sally eventually knew the food making her feel painful.

Nevertheless, a few minutes later, Sally got a phone call from her friend, spending the afternoon with her. Her friend said sorry to her, for she found a cake she baked spoiled, resulting in Sally's disease. It seemed every food had spoiled owing to the heat outside. No wonder Sally became that painful afterwards!
